A PIONEER IN PĀLI LEXICOGRAPHY

V. Trenckner.

* 26. Febr. 1824 — † 9. Jan. 1891.

The year 1855 is the most memorable year in the history of Pāli-Studies in Denmark, being marked by FAUSBØLL's Edition of the Dhammapada, the first scientific edition of a Pāli text in full in Europe, printed in that form of transcription with Latin character, which has become — with slight modifications — the generally accepted form of Pāli publications. It is true that Danish scholars had applied themselves to the study of Pāli long before. In 1821 R. K. RASK visited Ceylon, where, with the assistance of Rev. B. CLOUGH, he studied Pāli and Sinhalese and acquired his rich collection of manuscripts; after his return he wrote a short Pāli grammar, partially based upon the Bālāvatāra, presumably with the intention of publishing it together with some small reading texts for the use of beginners, but it never appeared.

Even more important was the work of N. L. WESTERGAARD, about 20 years later, in cooperation with the German professor FR. SPIEGEL, resulting in the well-known "Catalogus" of WESTERGAARD, and in SPIEGEL's "Anecdota Palica"; but here the Pāli was, in a most unpractical manner, transliterated into the Devanāgarī character. WESTERGAARD himself, who was deeply interested in Indian chronology and history, occupied himself more with such works as the Mahāvainśa and Buddhist History than with the canonical texts. He was, however, the primus motor of FAUSBØLL in encouraging him to take up the study of the Dhammapada and the Jātaka. "Et ut initium facerem, selegi, suadente Westerguardio, librum, qui Dhammapadam inscribitur", says FAUSBØLL in his preface to that edition. At the end of the same preface we meet with another name: "maxime vero [gratiæ agendæ sunt] viro linguarum doctissimo Trencknero, cujus auxilio adjutus inter librum typis excudendum corrigendumque plurima emendare potui". The next time we find this name again in scientific literature is in the Pāli Dictionary of R. C. CHILDERS, who describes TRENCKNER as "a ripe and graceful Pāli scholar" and mentions his "masterly edition of the first chapter of Milinda Pañha". Four years later TRENCKNER appears before the public with his small, but most important book the "Pāli Miscellany" (1879) after about 25 years of earnest work with Pāli manuscripts.

As Febr. 26th 1924 is the 100th anniversary of TRENCKNER it seems fitting, as an introduction to a Pāli Dictionary, to remind Pāli scholars of his life and scientific achievements. He was born in Copenhagen and grew up in the same milieu as WESTERGAARD and FAUSBØLL. His father, who was of German descent, was a baker by trade; his full name was CARL WILHELM TRENCKNER, but he himself used always to write it V. TRENCKNER. Having passed through a German middle-school in Copenhagen he received private instruction and matriculated at the university (1841), where he first turned to the study of classical philology (esp. the lectures of Prof. MADVIG), but at the same time applied himself to the study of Persian, Arabic, Syriac, Aethiopic and other Oriental languages, not to speak of modern European languages (as German, English, French, Spanish, Italian and Russian), in which he preserved a vivid interest all his life. The great results of the famous journeys of RASK and WESTERGAARD in Persia and India by and by drew his main interest towards the East, and so he never acquired any university degree in classical philology. A moderate fortune enabled him to indulge in linguistic studies at his ease during his youth. As may be seen from his written papers he was especially proficient in Arabic and Persian and for that reason he hoped (in 1853) to obtain a post at the Royal Library, but failed in spite of the most flattering recommendations from his Orientalist professors. At last (in 1861) he found a modest post in the Copenhagen Orphans' Asylum, where until his death (1891) he instructed the poor children in Danish and the elements of History and Geography, and accidentally some more advanced pupils in modern languages, in which he was altogether perfect.

From this little sketch of TRENCKNER's life one would not easily gather that we have here the biography of one of the most ingenious of Pāli scholars. Indeed we have omitted all that pertains to his Indian studies. These he began already before 1850 under the guidance of WESTERGAARD (Sanskrit, Zend and Pehlvi), and we see from his papers that in 1854 he was busy also with the study of Bengālī, Hindī, Sinhalese and Burmese. At the same period, during which he read the whole of Mahābhārata, he also acquainted himself with FAUSBØLL's transcripts of Pāli texts, which he copied for himself, correcting them by collating the originals. Later on he made transcripts on his own account of most of the Pāli manuscripts in the Copenhagen Collection and of some others lent from London. All his transcripts are very fine and scrupulously worked out in the stenographic system specially invented by FAUSBØLL for this purpose. An example hereof may be seen in our fig. 1. According to this system the çloka

TRENCKNER's first plan was to give a critical edition of Abhidhānappadīpikā with an alphabetical index. His Ms. for this edition dates from 1854—55, while his Dhātu-mañjūsā is from 1858. In the meantime he had transcribed the two first volumes of the Dīgha-Nikāya (ch. I—XVIII, 1856—57), the rest of the same dates from 1867—68. From this first period also dates his transcript of the whole Milinda-pañha (1857—59), of which he finished a clean copy for printing in 1860. From the sixties are his transcripts of Majjhima-Nikāya and Papañca-sūdanī (the last volume of which was finished in 1873), Atthasālinī, Sārasaṅgaha, and Sutta-nipāta, further the whole Saṃyutta-Nikāya and perhaps also the Aṅguttara-Nikāya; Manoratha-pūraṇī, the commentary on this latter work, which 10 years later was procured by FAUSBØLL from Ceylon on a modern paper manuscript, he finished in 1885, but unfortunately both his transcript of AN. and Mp. are lost, both having been lent to Dr. MORRIS in England, and nobody seems to know what has become of these two important manuscripts after the death of Dr. MORRIS. From the years 1870—79 date his transcripts of the Payogasiddhi, the Jātaka, Paramattha-jotikā, Dhammapadaṭṭhakathā, Parivāra, part of Paramattha-dīpanī, and finally a volume containing Udāna, Itivuttaka, Sutta-nipāta, Buddhavaṃsa, Cariyā-piṭaka, Thera- & Therī-gāthā (from London-Mss.).

In the year 1880 TRECKNER's printed edition of Milindapañha was finished, and during his last 10 years he was engaged on the monumental edition of the Majjhima-Nikāya, of which he did not live to see more than the first half through the press.

All the transcripts of TRECKNER are not mere copies of the manuscripts, they are from line to line filled with critical observations and cross-references to parallel passages. In fact, they were not written for publication, but to serve as materials for his great lexicographical and grammatical collections, which he began to arrange from the very first time of his occupation with Pāli.

TRECKNER'S Pāli Dictionary is written on small paper-slips, as will be seen from the specimens figg. 2a and 2b, very often with writing also on the back. It is curious to observe that, when he began to collect the Pāli words, he made use of the slips formerly used for his Arabic lexicon. The references begin with Abhidhānapp. (page and verse in CLOUGH'S Pāli Vocabulary), next follow passages quoted from TRECKNER'S own transcripts, sometimes having the signature of the palm-leaves, or referring to printed editions, e. g. Mahāvamsa ed. TOURNOUR, Vinayapiṭaka, vol. 1—5, Dhammapada (1855), the two first volumes of the Jātaka, etc.

The main stock of these materials contains only the nouns and indeclinable words in Pāli, whilst all the verbal forms are collected in a separate lexicon in the same manner as in WESTERGAARD'S Radices linguæ Sanscritæ, but so that the Pāli forms are referred to the different Sanscrit roots, which are placed in the ordinary alphabetical order. Fig. 3 shows the root NAND, that is followed by abhi°, ā°, & prati°, NAM, etc.

Minor portions of the paper-slips contain various observations concerning Pāli grammar, esp. suffixes, syntax, etc. (see fig. 4), miscellaneous quotations from the texts illustrating secular and daily life, chronology, law, names of plants, etc. (proper names and titles of books or their divisions are included among the nouns). With special interest TRECKNER devoted himself to the registration of peculiarities in the manuscripts and their writing, miscripts, etc., in Sinhalese and Burmese (see fig. 5, which shows some of his notes on the confounding of letters), all worked out with the usual minute accuracy. Often we find, under words whose spelling varies much in the manuscripts and books, a complete statistical enumeration of the different spellings met with by him.

In addition to all this TRECKNER left two volumes in 4to containing preliminary work for a complete Pāli Grammar (morphology, phonology, and prosody), but this, as well as his lexicon and the edition of Majjhima-Nikāya and its commentary, was unfortunately interrupted by his death in 1891 after more than 35 years' earnest and unswerving exertion. His valuable library was sold to Germany, all his transcripts were presented to our University Library, while the case containing his

PREFACE

From the preceding biographical sketch it will be seen that before 1875, the year in which CHILDERS' Dictionary appeared, TRENCKNER had read and made excerpts from Abhidhāna-ppadīpikā, the Dhātupāṭhas, Payogasiddhi, and part of Kaccāyana, part of Vinaya, the four Nikāyas (DN, MN, SN, AN), and the whole of Papañcasūdanī, Dhammapada and its Aṭṭhakathā, Sutta-nipāta and Paramatthajotikā, Udāna, Iti-vuttaka, Buddha-vaṃsa, Cariya-piṭaka, Thera- and Therī-gāthā, besides Jātaka and the whole of its Aṭṭhakathā, and further Atthasālinī, Sārasaṅgaha, and Mahāvaṃsa, for the most part from the manuscripts. When he commenced his work as an editor of texts, he had thus a fairly rich vocabulary at his disposal, containing all the most important word material from the chief canonical works in verse and prose, and a sufficiency of examples from commentaries and the works of grammarians.

As long as TRENCKNER lived he kept adding to his collections, drawing constantly upon new editions as they appeared, thus above all on Vinaya (1879—83), as well as on the texts published by the Pāli Text Society up to 1890. It has been the object of the present editors to add to his material from the texts subsequently published, in the first place the Pāli Text Society's now almost completed edition of the Canon. For TRENCKNER's references to the manuscripts we have naturally substituted references to these editions, and we think this the occasion to formulate as a desideratum for all future new editions of the canonical works, that they should be furnished with the pagination of the European Editio princeps (as done e. g. in the second edition of the Dhammapadaaṭṭhakathā, vol. I, Part I, 1925, and in the Pāli Text Society's Translation Series); the same would be desirable for new editions of the Aṭṭhakathās, in which the pagination of the Bangkok editions of Samantapāsādikā, Sumaṅgala-vilāsinī, Papañca-sūdanī, Sārattha-ppakāsinī, and Manorathapūraṇī should be given.

The late Professor RHYs DAVIDS, to whom belongs the great merit of having organized the editorial work, pointed out, as early as twenty years ago, the growing need of a lexical aid for the right understanding of the texts, and he always insisted that the text editions should be furnished with full indexes. At the international Congresses of Orientalists he repeatedly tried to find co-operators for such a dictionary (see inter alia his report in the Journal of the Pāli Text Society 1909, which appeared as a result of negotiations during the Congress of Orientalists at Copenhagen in 1908). The first essay on these lines was Professor STEN KONOW's „Pāli Words beginning with S", which was published in the Journal 1909, after having been considerably augmented by means of TRENCKNER's material. A small example (the beginning of the letter Y by D. ANDERSEN) of what could be achieved by the full use of TRENCKNER's material was shown to a circle of Sanskrit scholars at the Congress at Athens in 1912. On that occasion the promise of co-operation in the production of the dictionary was repeated, and there was a marked tendency in favour of the redaction of the dictionary taking place at Copenhagen where the work as it progressed could constantly be checked by means of TRENCKNER's material and with the Mss. of the RASK Collection.

Two years later the great war broke out and upset all further hope of international co-operation even in this domain. At Copenhagen, however, the work proceeded on the lines indicated, and in 1916, the present editors conceived a plan of editing the dictionary without the aid of foreign co-workers, a task which must of course be calculated to cover at least fifteen years.

In the meanwhile RHYS DAVIDS, whose great object it was to supply a provisional dictionary within as short a time as possible, had engaged a younger scholar as his assistant, and by the exertion of incredible energy contrived to publish the »Pāli Text Society's Dictionary« (1921—25), of which, however, he only saw the first two thirds through the press before his death.

The demand for a Pāli Dictionary being thus temporarily supplied, we have all the more reason to thank the Royal Danish Academy for still offering its aid in the production of the present dictionary by defraying the cost of the printing which we are now able to begin after eight years' preparation.

We have called this work a »Critical Pāli Dictionary«, both because TRENCKNER's material was from the first arranged on a critical basis, and because the nature of many of the modern editions of the texts imposes on us the obligation of re-testing the readings. The dictionary thus professes to be critical, but its criticism comes under the head of the »lower criticism« only, inasmuch as we are working exclusively on the Pāli Canon and the younger books appertaining to it. Our plan has simply been to supply verified material for that higher criticism which checks the Canon of Theravāda with the documents left by other Buddhist schools as well as with the deeper strata of Jain lore. Thus we have attempted to show what may be achieved by means of Pāli alone, but must leave it to others to draw the conclusions of further comparative study. We also believe that the fact of our having — according to TRENCKNER's plan — included Nomina propria and the Titles of books and their separate sections, as well as the most necessary items from the traditional Pāli grammar — from Kaccāyana to Saddanīti, — will contribute to render the material we are here supplying more generally useful.

We cannot send out this publication without expressing our sincere thanks for all the kind encouragement we have met with, above all for the very liberal subvention granted for several years from the first beginning of our work by the Director of the East Asiatic Company, His Excellency H. N. ANDERSEN; without this we should hardly have ventured to undertake the work in its present extent. We are also greatly indebted to the Danish Government, the Carlsberg Fund, the Rask-Ørsted Fund, to Mr. C. ALLER, the owner of Bianco Luno's printing office, and the University Library of Copenhagen for support received in various ways for Indian studies in connection with our work.

a ā, i ī, u ū, e ē ai, o ō au;
k ṇ, c ñ, ṭ ṇ, t n, p m;
y r l v, ḷ ḷ,
ṛ ṇ, (k = "āytam").

This is the system of the Madras Lexicon (1924), not taking into account the modifications of post-vocal and post-nasal mutes (cf. the Pāli spellings Akatti, akalu). In the present Dictionary we use l', r', n', for the sake of convenience, instead of ḷ, ṛ, ṇ, and we prefer 3 to k.

ON CRITICS AND NEW TEXTS

Parts 1 and 2 of the present dictionary (CPD) were welcomed by Professor MEILLET (BSL XXVII: 2,44; XXX: 3,73), and in the same Bulletin (XXXIII: 3,26) Professor JULES BLOCH gave an account of parts 3—4, kindly mentioning our attempts to apply metrical criteria, as well as other features of 'critical' endeavour. In spite of the reservations in our preface (p. X l. 25 foll.; 'lower criticism' = niedere Textkritik = critique verbale) the title "critical dictionary" has given offence to English ears, and our last reviewer (JRAS 1933: 435—437) quaintly interprets it as if our primary concern was a criticism of the Pali Text Society's Pāli-English Dictionary (PED) — "that corpus vile for "critical" pre-occupation" (p. 436,4). Of course, a lexicographic work, proceeding — slowly — from about 1870 (Preface p. IX) to the present day, must take notice of its "elder sister" from (1916) 1921—1925, and we have often met with inaccurate references and perplexing word-analysis (contrasting with most useful philosophical contributions), but we had no time for correcting systematically (not even the 46 pp of PED corresponding to CPD 1—234), nor for accurate statistics as to misprints or mistakes of predecessors (as in PED, Afterword p. 202,7), nor yet for calculating the percentage — CPD contra PED — of negatives in a- an- (JRAS 1933: 436,2). We take as compliments the reviewer's remarks about proper names (436,1) and compound nouns (436,9), and we do not cavil at inconsistencies in the allegory about 'Sisters' and 'Godmothers', fancy being admissible in fairy-tales; but it is a matter of regret that, of the two things expected from a book-review, viz. a characterization of the work and advice to the workers (desiderata), the former has been obscured by uncalled-for comparisons, and the latter condensed into an injunction ex cathedra to "keep severely to philology, and shun general statements about Buddhist ideas inserted without historical safeguards" (437,4).

Our well-meaning critics all unite in kindly regretting the small output of seven years (2 fasc. in 1926—30, one fasc. yearly in 1931—33). We too regret that we have had other work to delay us (one of us Saddanīti I—III in 1928—30), and still more we deplore that our list of corrections and additions — to be published at the end of the vowel-volume: A-O — exceeds 500 entries for pp. 1—234, this chiefly from re-testing Ct.s and from a closer analysis of classical passages, to a lesser extent from entirely new books.

For — thanks to the Pali Text Society, the Simon Hewavitarne Bequest, and the Siamese Government — after 1926 there remained very few Pāli classics to edit. Nevertheless we obtained from Ceylon: first editions of Cp-a, Th-a II, Suttas-a, and the first complete Paṭis-a, besides the first reliable text of Ap (by A. P. BUDDHADATTA).

From Burma: first editions of Mp-ṭ, Vism-mhṭ, a complete Sp-ṭ, and a MS of Ja-pṭ.

From Siam, as a Government gift: the new Tipiṭaka, and a Vism-mhṭ with useful pratīka-indexes.

The Pali Text Society gave but one first edition (JRAS 1933: 436,16 uses a different terminology), viz. Buddhadatta's Manuals II (Vin-vn, Utt-vn with full index), but, besides the concluding volume of Professor GEIGER's wonderful Mahāvamsa work (Cūlavamsa II), it has brought out about 4500 pages of Ct.s, known before in Colombo and Bangkok prints, so that within two or three years, the whole of the Aṭṭhakathā will be referred to here as "page and line of E<sup>e</sup>".

As a matter of course, we are adopting E<sup>e</sup> references as soon as the editions reach us, but the oriental prints must still be consulted, for:

Ps-C<sup>e</sup> is more scientific than Ps-E<sup>e</sup>, which (in vol. II—III) only gives an eclectic text from three oriental editions;

Mp-E<sup>e</sup> does not always improve on C<sup>e</sup> (S<sup>e</sup>), and its readings have not been checked by reference to Mp-ṭ;

Sp-E<sup>e</sup> suffers from underrating of the ṭikās (Vjb, Sp-ṭ, Vmv), and the Chinese translation does not seem to have improved our text as yet.

Only the editor of Ud-a and Spk has tried to compensate inferior MS tradition by a systematic study of parallels. Unfortunately the ṭikās on Spk are scarce works; we have none, and surely Mr. WOODWARD would have made constant use of ṭikās if available in full, as he is well aware of the importance and the antiquity of the inṭ and pṭ class (see Ud-a 94,9 and cp. Ud-a 22,22—23,16 ≠ pṭ on Sv I 33,14-34). We are, personally, indebted to Mrs. RHYS DAVIDS for having introduced us to Professor MAUNG TIN, thus facilitating our access to ṭikā editions, and we thank our Rangoon friends for Ja-pṭ, useful (besides Ja-pot) as an instrument of exegesis, and interesting as (probably) the source of early interpolations in the Jātakatṭhakathā (Ja VI 12,21' = pṭ; 110,33' [tud°] = pṭ; I 135,18'-19' [cat° . . . rājā] = pṭ; 418,5 ≠ pṭ).

Since Indian and European editions will continue to help out each other, we are sorry that our appeal (Preface p. IX l. 24) as to S<sup>e</sup> page-numbers has met with no sympathy. It is a pity that the handy text-references — "[38<sup>10</sup>]" and the like before pratīkas — introduced by the American editor of Ps I (or at least page-references as employed by the Indian editors of Paṭis-a-E<sup>e</sup> Nidd-a-E<sup>e</sup>) have not been adopted by English, German, and Japanese co-workers. No system of sigla

— like that of FEER (SN), FAUSBØLL (Sn), and RHYS DAVIDS (SvI), which we tried to complete CPD p. XVII 17-23 — has been imposed on PTS-editors; some have two sets of foot-notes, others mix up parallels with various readings; some (e. g. Sp) are allowed to give the Pāli as we generally write and analyse Sanskrit, Prākṛit and neo-Indian, others puzzle the beginner with the pāli shibboleth ṇ, and with pa-
dacchedas such as ogadha' appattā paḷigadh' appattā (Spk I 295,4), susiraṇ nāma
vaṇs' ādi-ghaṇaṇ nāma sammādi (Sv II 617,6), uttar' itara-ñāṇo (Sv III 878,20), c'anuppajjanti . . . visikhā-sucariyānuyuttatā (ib. 945,1 . . . 3), kappa-tidvaṇṇgulaṃ kappo
 (ib. 962,4).

After these frank remarks on the welcome, but hurried, editions of the Aṭṭha-kathā, we profess unreserved admiration for the PTS Translation Series, that truly 'critical' part of the Society's work, and express our gratitude to scholars like MAUNG TIN and WILHELM GEIGER, and to the General Editor, who created this series in 1909, and gave the example, philologically and esthetically, by her Psalms of the Sisters.

ELOF OLESEN

In issuing the 10th part of this volume we regret to announce the death of our collaborator through many years, which occurred on September 23rd after several months' failing health. Mr. Olesen took part as long as possible in the collecting of materials and the reading of the proofs of this and the previous parts of this first volume, which bears witness to his accuracy and unfailing interest in the progress of the work.

Mr. Olesen, who was born August 17th 1877 and matriculated at the University of Copenhagen in 1895, at first applied himself to the study of classical philology and Sanskrit. From 1903 to 1925 he was a diligent and well-informed co-editor of the late Professor S. Sørensen's Index to the Names of the Mahābhārata. After that time he was our constant and faithful assistant in the study of Pāli-texts.

It is with gratitude that we remember his unremitting interest and the labour he gave to his task.

Copenhagen and Uppsala, October 1939.

DINES ANDERSEN — HELMER SMITH

DINES ANDERSEN

26th December, 1861—28th March, 1940.

Once again death has deprived this Dictionary of one of its workers and this time the very man to whose initiative and perseverance it is due that TRENCNER's material has been utilised and supplemented, with the result up to now presented to the scientific world in 11 parts. That DINES ANDERSEN should live to see the completion of his life work was expected neither by himself nor any one else; nevertheless it seems tragic that his work should have been broken off during the treatment of the first letter of the alphabet. But his share in the Dictionary is of course by no means limited to what had appeared in print or had merely been worked out in manuscript at the time of his death; it is a consolation to know that his personality and working method will leave their mark also on the future parts of the work which he cherished with such a warm affection.

Born on the Danish island of Fyn in the little village of Ullerslev where his father was a millwright, DINES ANDERSEN grew up in very humble circumstances, and until his fourteenth year had to be satisfied with the ordinary board-school education. But the bright and gifted boy with the insatiable craving for knowledge attracted the attention of influential friends and he was sent to the Grammar School of Odense, where he matriculated in 1881.

At the University of Copenhagen he devoted himself to the study of philology, primarily as represented by the classical languages; but at the same time he pursued general linguistic studies under VILHELM THOMSEN and KARL VERNER, and studied Sanskrit under FAUSBØLL. What fascinated him here was chiefly Sanskrit in the historical aspect of the language; the elaborate poetry and subtle thought of this literature was bound to remain somewhat foreign to his nature. He never got over a certain shyness towards the contents of the classical Sanskrit texts, whereas he made the syntax of the language the subject of his first works. In 1889 he was awarded the gold medal of the University for an investigation on the use of the participles in the Pañcatantra and the Hitopadeṣa, and in 1892 took his doctor's degree with a dissertation "Om Brugen og Betydningen af Verbets Genera i Sanskrit, oplyst især ved Undersøgelser om Sprogbrugen i Chandogya-Upanishad" (On the use and meaning of the voices of the Sanskrit verb specially illustrated by investigations on the usage in the Chandogya-Upanishad).

It was, however, as a Pālist that DINES ANDERSEN won a reputation. When he was appointed librarian to the University Library in 1891, V. TRENCKNER's transcripts of Pāli texts and his collection of words on slips were given into his charge and this determined his career as a researcher. The need for a Pāli dictionary on truly philological principles was quite clear to him and he saw just as clearly the extreme difficulty of the task, amongst other things because the European—and indeed also the Indian—printed editions of Pāli texts were often of an exceedingly provisional character. But it was impossible to begin the lexicographical work at once. First it was necessary to make a thorough study of the texts. This he did at the instance of FAUSBØLL, his critical attitude and his demand for the application of the methods of classical philology becoming the more rigorous as the edition of the texts fell into the hands of well-meaning but untrained amateurs.

DINES ANDERSEN's treatment of the texts progressed steadily. In 1891 he issued a translation of selected Buddhist legends from the Rasavāhini. The succeeding years were taken up amongst other things by the making of an index to FAUSBØLL's edition of the Jātaka. It constitutes the seventh volume of the edition and contains a complete list of proper names and titles as well as an index of the initial stanzas and another of parallel verses; it was published in 1897. Of the greatest importance for the study of Pāli at universities all over the world was the textbook of Pāli of which DINES ANDERSEN issued the first part in 1901 under the title of "A Pāli Reader" I. This volume contains a most useful collection of texts revised by means of manuscripts and commentaries, and followed by notes, critical and bibliographical. The fine pedagogic qualities of this anthology, apparently intended to be a counterpart to Wimmer's Oldnordisk Læsebog which DINES ANDERSEN had learnt to appreciate as a college teacher of Old Norse, assured it a public all over the world; a fourth impression had to be issued in 1935. Its indispensable supplement "A Pāli Glossary" appeared in 1904—07. This was not merely a glossary to the texts contained in the Reader but, as it deals also with the vocabulary of the "Dhammapada", it contains no small amount of lexicographical material and much patient labour is embodied in not a few of the articles of the glossary, which give evidence of DINES ANDERSEN's capacity for combination and his keen critical eye.

A couple of years after the appearance of the first part of the Reader DINES ANDERSEN was appointed professor of Indian philology in the University of Copenhagen, holding this professorship from 1903 to 1927. But his university duties did not divert his interest from what would, according to his previous publications, be his actual aim, viz. the great, badly needed Pāli Dictionary. At the Congress of Athens in 1912 he succeeded in gaining adherents to the idea of an international collaboration with its chief seat in Copenhagen, which, thanks both to TRENCKNER's material and the collections of Pāli manuscripts preserved at the Royal Library, would be the natural centre of the preparatory work. The outbreak of the Great War made it impossible to carry through the largely planned programme and so, in 1916, DINES ANDERSEN took the matter into his own hands. He won for his plan HELMER SMITH (now Professor in Upsala University), a pupil of K. F. JOHANSSON, FISCHER and LÜDERS, and initiated him into the special methods of Pāli philology. In conjunction with HELMER SMITH he had, in 1914, issued a new edition of the "Sutta-Nipāta" with new material of text-critical importance, and SMITH was also joint editor of "The Pāli Dhātupāṭha and the Dhātumañjūsā", issued in 1921 as preparatory to what the editors called "our edition of TRENCKNER's Pāli Dictionary".

But the abundant new material which appeared subsequent to 1891 — editions and reprints of the Canon and Commentaries due mainly to the Pāli Text Society, the Siamese Government, the S. Hewavitarne Bequest, and finally to the King of Cambodia — involved an extension of TRENCKNER's plan, and so the work which the two authors began to publish in 1924 is an entirely new work based on TRENCKNER's material. They have called their work "A Critical Pāli Dictionary" and by the qualification "critical" they desired to express the fact that the textual treatment of many of the modern editions really required a critical revision for the settling of dubious readings. It was DINES ANDERSEN's aim to lay the necessary foundation for future comparative studies of Theravāda's Commentaries contra documents of other Buddhistic schools. Therefore, with a wise limitation, he confined himself to the Pāli literature only, his main object being the internal textual criticism, the restitution of the text-form commented upon by Buddhaghosa and Dhammapāla. To his own words — see the Preface to the present volume, p. X — as to the sources of "lower criticism" it may be added that, along with his legitimate preference for the Pāli, Sanskrit, and Ardhamāgadhi documents, he gradually rose to a greater appreciation of the Sinhalese paraphrases and works auxiliary to the Theravāda Scriptures. The symbiosis of Pāli and Sinhalese, Indo-Aryan languages of different pedigree and in different stages of evolution — from the very beginning of Ceylonese literary activity down to Waskaḍuwe Subhūti, the friend of CHILDERS and FAUSBØLL — necessarily appealed to that Scandinavian scholar of peasant stock, who never lost touch with his patois, feeling, and saying expressly, that standard Danish alone did not suffice for a full knowledge and mastery of the mother tongue.

That DINES ANDERSEN did not live to see his life-work completed is not to be wondered at. The task was immense, it required an extraordinary amount of time and labour, and he was no fast worker. His conscientious scrutinizing of the many problems, great and small, presented by the lexicographical work might sometimes give the impression that the work was not making progress, but there is no doubt that this caution was well-founded. In addition, failing health during his last years not rarely prevented him from putting forth his full working power.

DINES ANDERSEN's unstinted recognition of the contributions of others, whether in his own branch of science or in more remote fields was a fine thing. He was never of the kind that seek to assert themselves at the expense of others. His modesty often showed itself in a touching admiration of younger and older colleagues; the contributions of the younger he sometimes regarded with a quaint mixture of timorous aloofness and warm recognition, while as far as his own predecessors and teachers were concerned his feelings were almost of a religious kind; men like TRECKNER and FAUSBØLL were sacrosanct. This was by no means because he did not know the value of his own contribution, it merely expressed a reverent affection. These teachers had given him all that he required for his work, and he never felt a desire to attain to a more profound understanding of Buddhism by a stay in Ceylon, Burma, or Siam, where the texts he admired and analysed as a grammarian were a living reality. He did not think he could learn anything there, and if we consider his nature, he was probably right. But this was undeniably connected with his limitations. To him the Pāli literature was, in the main, texts to which the method developed for classical philology was to be applied. The great Danish classical philologist J. N. MADVIG was his ideal, whose methods he thought should be more rigidly applied in Indology; DINES ANDERSEN never really got beyond his youthful admiration of school Latin.

Yet he by no means lacked understanding of the spirit and civilisation which found expression in his cherished Pāli texts, and he could not in the course of years escape the influence of ideas expressed in these texts. He would say that in a way he felt both like a Buddhist and a Christian. This shows his sincere feeling for the religious values in the old texts, as well as his honest admission of the difficulty of accepting them in their historical, established form. Both sides are characteristic of his personal evaluation, while they also, reveal his extreme caution. Realising the limitation of his powers, he did not venture farther than where he could find a footing, and therefore he was able to contribute something excellent within the limits drawn by himself. As surely as Goethe's oft-abused words are true, that mastery reveals itself in limitation, DINES ANDERSEN was a master.

<sup>2</sup>a-, prefix used as augment in the aor. (resp. impf.) tense of verbs as well as in the conditional forms, equal to the same prefix in sa-, but in Pāli it is very often dropped (see GEIGER § 158), which is probably due to peculiar prosodical features. Even after the prohibitive particle mā (q. v.) it often occurs, differently from sa-. — With a foll. or pree. a (ā) it is contracted to ā, e. g. āsi(m), āsum, ud-ānesi, apā-nudi, avā-cari, upā-gami, pā-hesi; note also the lengthening of a in pātvā-kāsi (from pātu-karoti), sacchā-kāsi (besides sacchi-a-kāsi and sacchi-kāsi, from sacchi-karoti), manasā-kāsi (besides manasi-a-kāsi and manasi-kāsi). As seen from these examples the augment always immediately precedes the verbal root, and thus we have with prp. ati: acc-a-gā, with adhi: ajjh-a-gā, with anu: anv-a-gā or ann-a-gā, with abhi: abbh-a-ññāsi, with paṭi: pacc-a-bhāsi, with pari: pary-a-gā, and with vi: vy-a-gamā, etc.; in ajjha-so-vasi, Bv III 26 = IV 19 (p. 20-22), the augment and the prp. are separated from the verb (tmesis). — After the augment an original double cons. is preserved, e. g. a-ggahim, a-cchidā (and after this analogy also a-bbhidā, from vbbhid), a-ññāsi, a-ttāsi, a-ddakkhi, ud-a-bbaddhi (vyvadh), a-ssosi (yṣru), while ud-a-ddhari (v. l. ud-a-bbhari) is perhaps a blending of uddhari and *ud-a-hari. Likewise we find double cons. (: sa. single cons. + r) in a-ddasa (yḍṣ, or after the analogy of a-ddakkhi), a-ssaji (yṣrj, cf. sa. asrākṣit); on the other hand we find e. g. a-phassayi (yṣprṣ), a-bhassatha (yḅhrāmṣ), a-sāyisum (yṣvād).

Rem. a. In some few instances the augment is placed before the prp.: a-paribṛūhayi, Ja V 361,16<sup>a</sup>, a-vissaji (or corr. to avassaji), Ja VI 79,20<sup>a</sup>, a-pāpessam, Ja II 11,18; or between two prp.: pacc-a-niyyāsi, DN II 22,18 (also in the imp. -āhi (!), ib. 16; perhaps we have here pacca = sa. pratyak), ajjhavodahi (?) Ja V 365,29<sup>a</sup>.

Rem. b. The augment is sometimes added to other forms of the verb than those to which it properly belongs: ud-a-patto si, Ja III 484,22<sup>a</sup>, cf. so ca vegen' ud-a-(p)patto, ib. V 71,11<sup>a</sup>; 73,15<sup>a</sup> (see Fsb. Bem p. 35 (41)); vy-a-sanna (= visanna) Ja IV 399,6<sup>a</sup>, 480,7<sup>a</sup>, 486,9<sup>a</sup>; pacc-a-niyyāhi, DN II 22,18 (but see above, rem. a); perhaps also in nir-a-ssajanti (= nis-sajanti), Sn. 791, if not a blending of nirassati and nissajati as suggested Pj II 717,6).

Rem. c. Sometimes we find augmented aor. with the terminations of the present tense: a-pucchasi, Sn. 1050; a-siṇcati Vva 307,12<sup>a</sup> (with two pi pāṭha) (cf. <sup>1</sup>a above); otherwise it deserves to be noticed that as we have aor. directly derived from the special present stems, e. g. sam-a-tiṭṭhata, pa-hiṇi, so we have, vice versa, pres. pāheti (q. v.) after the analogy of aor. pāhesi, where ā contains the augment.

Rem. d. As for a-pabbaji, a-gaṇhi, a-lābhiniṣu, a-sakkhi, a-heṭṭhāyuni, etc., where a has a negative meaning, see below under <sup>3</sup>a- (7).

<sup>3</sup>a- (and before vowels an-), negative prefix. This a-, e. g. in appamāna (cf. pamāna), is by comm. explained as 'great', Ps ad MN II 13,19 (appanāñānti vaddhita-pamāṇāni; mahantānti attho); Sp-ṭ ad Sp 22,8 (mahanto samvaro a-samvaro, vuddhi-attho hi ayam a-kāro cf. Sv I 19,29); As 44,27 (vuddhipattā sekkhā = a-sekkhā); Sadd (do.). — 1. In adj. comp. with subst. = 'without that', e. g. a-kaṇa, a-kāma, a-kopa, etc. q. v. — 2. comp. with subst. to denote the opposite or the thing in question destroyed: mahāpaṭhavim a-paṭhavim karissāmi, MN I 127,11; do. a-gāma, a-uigama, a-jānapada, MN II 97,27 ≠ AN I 159,33; a-nagara, AN I 160,1, Ps (MN I 139); a-raṭṭha, Ja IV 389,20; V 135,1; a-brāhmaṇa, Ja IV 388,5 (cf. kulā-a-kulataṃ gata, Ja V 117,6<sup>a</sup>); assa maraṇam a-maraṇam bhavissati, Ja VI 81,8. — 3. The opposite is sometimes expressly denoted by another prefix: a-vivitta: pa-vivitta, Dhpa II 77,2-5; a-kubbato: sa-kubbato, Dhpa I 51-52; a-kataññurūpa: su-kataññurūpa, Ja IV 98,28-99,2. — 4. In comp. the negated member comes last: katakata, Dhpa 50; uddiṭṭhānuddiṭṭha, AN III 274,4, guttāgutta, ib. 32. In a-takkagāha-takkagāha, Ja I 105,19<sup>a</sup>, the order is determined by the words commented upon (cf. a-kappiya-kata). As to phalāphala, maggāmagga (q. v.) cf. Tr. Pāli Misc. 74. — 5. Negation apparently to the verb of a clause, but added to a subst. or adv.: evam no idhāpi a-vāso bhavissati, Ps ch. 56; an-ācariyakule vasam (= ācariyakule a-vasamāno) Ja I 436,19*. — 6. Often added to infinite forms of the verbs, part., inf., abs., grdv.: a-jānam, a-passam, MN I 288,6-7; a-passato, Ja VI 552,8* (cf. 1a); a-katena me ettha katam, a-vusitena me ettha vusitam, MN I 515,22-23, suriye an-atthamite, Dh-p-a I 86,9; a-karaṇiya, a-kattabba, etc. (q. v.); a-gantum, As. 156,17 (Ed. wrongly āgantūm), a-dātum, Ja V 3,21, a-pabbajitūm (na sakkā), Dh-p-a I 136,3, a-socitūm (na sakkā), Ja III 214,7* = 390,5*, an-āharitūm, Dh-p-a I 403,9; a-katvā, a-disvā, etc.; an-ūpaneyya, Sn 799, an-abhineyya, Vin III 149,16. — 7. Also to personal forms of the verbs a- is not rarely added (although sometimes with na as v. l.): an-ajjhagam, Th 405, an-abhirami, Ja III 30,20, an-āgami, Mhv V 249 (v. l., Ed. nāgami), a-kattha, Ja IV 401,15, a-gaṇhi, Ja V 135,3 (v. l. na gaṇhi), a-pabbaji, Ja VI 129,13 (but here Tr. proposes to read upacchinditvā na pabbaji?), mā adamsu, SN II 200,17, a-parihāyimsu, AN III 310,19 (Ed. na), a-labbhimsu, Ja V 229,22 (B. na), a-labbhissam, Ja VI 35,10, 43,11; a-sakkhi, Ja VI 202,21*; a-heṭhayum, B. na ... aheṭhayum, Ja VI 591,17*; an-ajjhācarati AN IV 270,11 (v. l.); a-jānāmi, Ja II 243,25 (B. āma jānāmi); a-ppabodhati (q. v.), Dh-p. 143 (?); an-uppajjati, Dh-p-a III 376,15; a-sakkosi, Ja I 116,24 (v. l.); a-sakkoti, Ja IV 122,3* (B. na), Dh-p-a 151,1, IV 17,4; [cirass' apassāmi, Ja IV 446,29* ought to be spelt cirassa(m) passāmi]. — 8. The negative prefix is doubled (with a positive result) in ana- or combined with another negative prefix, e. g. an-a-kāma (not unwilling), a-nippala (not without fruit). — 9. ana- in ana-bhāva is negative of bhāva, a phenomenon better known from Prakrit (cf. PISCHEL § 77); likewise prob. ana-vajja, whereas anaññāta anappameyya (?), anamatagga, anavaya, anavosita (q. v.) should be explained otherwise. [Cf. Tr. Pāli Misc. p. 64.]

ā-, the base of several pronouns and adv.: ayaṃ (assa, etc.); asu (adu), amu (etc.); ato, atra, atha, atho, cf. ajja.

ā-, the prp. ā (q. v.) shortened before double cons., e. g. a-kkamati, a-ssama, etc.

ān, in gramm. designation of the nasal sound or ending of the accusative, Kacc. 8; 30 (cf. niggaḥita). — °vacana, n. = acc. sg., Kacc-v. 188.
